Anyone else notice, the huge number of Vampires these days? Red Court Vampires, that's fuckedup.

— I've never seen more than one since The Event. I'd heard they were dead until that, weirdness, involving the demon last year. It's unsettling actually. Normal Red Courts go through a phase, sometimes years, of being infected, and yet, it's the same people as it was before. And these are not nobodies. The Chair of the Chamber of Commerce. The Police Chief? The Mayor? This isn't exactly a normal, good, or right thing.

I'm Done Waiting

— I'm sick and tired of living under His shadow. He comes into town, tries to take over. Tries to control the place and assert his dominance. And little of what he does is overt. He just casts a sense of dread in those that are worried about his motives, excites the already mentally unhinged who want to start paling with him, and just raises the tension level. I'm sick of waiting around, waiting for him to move, worrying about what his next action will be. I'm sick of not being able to do anything to stop him directly, because it would be against some set of rules or ethics. Well fuck it. I've gotta do something.

Some People Just Go Too Far!

Major Cryptid Far From Home?

— What the fuck! Champie was the in the river! Honestly, moving from Lake Champlain, how big an act of hubris is it to move an entire Cryptid! That's big news! Champie is not exactly small time, sightings of her go back to before even the Loch Ness Monster! She's possibly the second most famous monster in the world. How do you move her to another location? She was abused, and someone needs to pay for that crime! Some people claim they saw a giant dinosaur fly away from the scene. I think someone used Champie to attack a Dragon. This is simply uncouth. How do you do that man?

Who Is Behind These Vampires?

The fact of the matter is that there's no good Red Court stronghold in the area. The Red Court isn't strong enough to do this. OF course - this begs the question: but who. Of course, the Previs family allied themselves with the Red Court of Montreal, so they might be behind this. But the Chamber of Commerce is only useful if you happen to have a reason to control the businesses. Most people choose to deal with them. So - why this attack? What makes these people at this time?

Who is going to take these three people, and make use of them, or who is trying to cause the chaos of the dangers involved? OK - we're all thinking it - it could be Crane. But it's not his style, he'll use money first, instead of force. Why would he use force, and why would he kill three people? That many murders would be unthinkable, and Crane has never, to our knowledge, harmed someone.

I think the prime suspect is Lord Previs, especially in light of recent events. ■

A Royal Visit

I hear that Titania is coming to town for a visit. Michael Shore is holding an audience with his Queen at his home in the Fauborg Saint-Jean Baptist district. His home is being appointed as this paper goes to print, and the Queen will be in town only a few days from now. This is the kind of thing that we should celebrate. It's about the time of the year where the Queen of Summer is going to be at her weakest, and at the same time, she is still the most imperious of royal Majesties. Normally, we have the Winter Knight honouring the city with her presence.

She has requested that the personage, Ash of the Pen, come into her presence, in order to be questioned, regarding his plans for the Summer Court. Luma of the Winter Court, as well as the Heku, will be invited to the meeting, as a hand of friendship from the Court of Summer to the Court of Winter. She asks that Samuel Harvester, He Who Walks the World, to come to her, to have a conversation about his future, with her.

Titania claims that she has been too long away from the City of White, and that she has much to discuss. ■

Look Closely, That Was Certainly A Coverup

That boat that was destroyed by Champie. I'm not so sure that that actually was the case. Look at the boat more closely on the news, the keel wasn't split, meaning that it wasn't dropped on, instead the main deck was shattered, and the sides split. Sure, if you managed to drop a sea serpent from hundreds of feet in the air, you could manage to destroy a boat, but the keel would take most of the damage. If you look, the debris was scattered throughout the harbour. This means that the debris was likely sent into the air, not pressed underwater, and thrown everywhere. Meaning, that somehow, the boat was struck from a force moving upward, from within, which represents a blast, likely a bomb, moving from inside. This boat had a shaped charge in it is the most likely explanation. If there's a wizard powerful enough to pull off a spell of that magnitude, well... they would have to be able to practically destroy the world. All in all, it doesn't look good. Someone, or something, has exploded a boat, and used Champie to cover it up! ■
